

Your Legacy Can Help Build Homes Today and for Generations to Come

At True Ground Housing Partners, a stable home is just the beginning. When you include True Ground in your legacy or estate plans, you help strengthen communities and ensure that families across the Washington, D.C. metro region have not only housing but stability, connection, and opportunity for generations to come.

What Is Planned Giving?

Planned giving allows you to make a future gift, often through your will, retirement plan, or life insurance, while taking care of your loved ones first. It costs nothing today but ensures the causes you care about continue to thrive. At True Ground, that means helping future neighbors have a place to call home and a community that supports them with a firm foundation.

Making a Legacy Gift Is Easy

Reflect

Think about the places and communities that have shaped your life and how you can help them beyond your lifetime.

Choose What Works for You

Include True Ground in your legacy plans through:

- Leaving a gift in your will
- Naming us as a beneficiary of your retirement account or life insurance policy
- Exploring other planned giving options, including gifts of real estate or financial assets – such as stocks, bonds, mutual funds – or your donor-advised fund (DAF).

Legacy Is More Than a Financial Gift

Legacy is a lasting expression of your values - and the role you play in helping communities thrive for generations.

Whether you've volunteered, served on our board, or stayed close to a community you love, you've helped build the spirit of home at True Ground. A planned gift is a meaningful way to carry that care forward —so more neighbors can belong and thrive well into the future.

"I don't believe people can truly do their best without a stable home. It's foundational in every sense, literally and figuratively."

- Jean Falvey, Former Executive Director, True Ground Housing Partners
